

Big Picture

Weekly Report 20 ~ 2/4/2019 - 2/10/2019

This past week in the Independent Study and Mentorship program has been focused on the big aspects of the program such as original work, final product, and mentor visits. These aspects put into perspective the accomplishments and work associated with the program and what is expected in the future.

Reflecting on the original work and putting together the original work presentation and speech provided a great opportunity to connect what has already been accomplished with what can be accomplished in the future. Because the final product proposal rough draft was due this week, this was an opportunity to synthesize everything learned thus far and find ways to utilize this knowledge to do something that would be different from the original work but still expand the continuing knowledge of the teaching industry and all of its working components.

When deciding on the final product, the most important item taken into consideration was building off of what was accomplished through the original work but altering it to create something new and unique to showcase the learning so far. Through these, the presentation was put together and compiled everything from the beginning of the year until now. Putting together an overview of the year resolidified the product proposal as something that would be truly beneficial both to myself and my mentor as a helpful resource and showcase of learning.
